LADY LITERATEURS AT LARGE. There is nothing in this world I admire so much as a woman of talent, industry and prudence. I refer more particularly to women who have taken to literature, and owe nothing to friendship for their poputhe like of fortune, is self-reliant, independent and rarely condescent to ask the assistance of her friends in getting before the public. She feels groud in the possession of her gifts, but nevor overrates them. Her manners indicate the retiring lady; her whole nature is sensitive; her thoughts are fixed on the object of her ambition. Such a woman cares but little for the showy westments of that indefinable jade called "fashleachie society" none forces, hereaft was the lils of fortune, is self-reliant, independ ments of that indefinable jade called "fash-ionable society," never forces herself upon the public. She feels grateful to the press for what is says of her, but rarely couris its favors. She prefers to walt until public opinion has passed judgment upon her real rth, rather than purchase notoriety with cription, whose merits the public have been ulek to recognize, and whose fame is of our value. These women have done somehing for our literature. They have imressed a good moral on many young minds. am however sorry to say that Washington els, too lifle to go out nursing, and too al to take in washing, have for some umber three. They are extremely lightsurted, and not very heavy-headed. Like m, dashing along at a brick pace, afmitterers in my eye, a certain Mire Philo-nena, as she delights in writing besself fown in the Heme Truth-Teller. Philomena is an exact counterpart of a dozen or so of these bright-colored butterflies, who dark about Washington mounted on the very smallest literary reputation. Miss Philo-mona is very severe on our mother tongos; ruts and slays it in various ways, and serves mona le, to me, a very love of a wo man. She travals on her pretentions, and makes a good thing of it, too. She knows the value of cramming herself down the pub-ic's big throat, and for that purpose hoisis her delicately embroidered fing in the pursonal column of the House Truth-Teller, journal of high moral character, remarka journal of high moral character, remark-able as affording an asylum for femiles who travel in the shadow of literature. When Philomena sails up the Avenue of a fine afternoon, her friends of the Diplomatic Corps drop her no end of smiles and howe; trate crineline moves aside with acton shment as she sweens along, and young nie shoulder, which Philemena feelels in ad miration of her literary reputation. She has cultivated a delicate acquaintance with the critics, and affects wonderful respect for the press. Mr. Perkins, of the Dully Bleicer, the press. Mr. Ferkins, of the Daily Blacer, is a dear, good friend. Mr. Fudge, of the Sains day Fladge, has said no end of presty things of her. Winows, of the Weekly Cul-licator, has mounted her literary ability on the highest horse, and kept it galtoping be-fore the public for the last six months. I have several times pushed my brain to find out the secret of Philomena's acqualstance with these learned and very worthy censors of Mr. Greenmoog.

My friend was sur- to breedly "be will not be so never line as prised to find one of sosmall a literary reputation indulging in each splendor. Philo-mona received him with an ease of manner and freedom truly surprising. Fire min-utes in her company and his native hashfulnose had vanished, and he was as much at home as if he had been a Congressman and an old acquaintance. She admired his writings, and made hold to tell him so. He had not a more attentive reader! She had several times told several of her friends the highest object of her ambition was to write like him. Philomena supposted that perthe limit. Philomena suggested that perhaps he would jobt her over a cup of teather hand he weakened for iteather effects her thoughts. ANOTHER ACCIDENT ON THE TRAPPER.—
The funnie trapeze performer at the Front Street theatro, little Zoe, fell once or twice while executing her performances last evolute. The first time she fell into the net which is apread below for the purpose, and was not hart, but after the net had boun removed, with a view of closing that part of the performance, she westered another trial from a great height, syvinging with a sommersuit and caketing a rope, when the rope slipped through her bands and she fell to the stage, striking upon her face and knees. She was taken up and carried behind the scenes, but subsequently again appeared on the stage, though showing evident mark on her face and person of lujury received. These trapeze and kindred performances, endancering life and limb, are not pleasant to look upon, however astonishing they may be, and should be discarded as means of public entertainment.— Hallimeter Note, 25cf.

This is totally error-eous, as the balance-sheet, on a comparison tacted female to destruction. I have more cous, as the balance-sheet, on a comparison than once thoughs a dollar a columns more than Philomeon's efforts in the Sunday papers worth. I, however, confess not to be a good judge of the value of such writing.

Miss Philomeon is an excellent judge of March J, 1860, to March J, 1860, the total mankind, and knows exactly how to bring receipts into the Treasury were a little over a Congressman down, using the artillery of her eyes. She writes the most dulest letters of perspiculty. Every dollar of this was exof perspiralty. Every dollar of this was ex-pended, and the public debt for the same period increased about $6,000,000, as appears from the official publication of the Treasury
